Novel biodegradable nonporous polymeric 3D scaffolds based on sodium alginate for repairing full-thickness skin defects. Novel non-porous, biodegradable polymeric 3D scaffolds for skin regeneration were fabricated using a chemical cross-linking process and evaluated in a full-thickness defect model in vivo. The 3D scaffolds were prepared using sodium alginate hydrogel-based templates and tested for their mechanical, suture-holding, and degradability properties. Sodium alginate scaffolds were fabricated by lyophilizing sodium alginate solutions in organic phase. The degradability test showed that the average weight loss of the sodium alginate 3D scaffolds was approximately $45.6 \pm 5.3\%$ at 5 weeks. After implantation of sodium alginate scaffolds into a full-thickness defect on a New Zealand white rabbit's dorsal skin, the defect on the rabbit's skin was completely filled with the scaffold by 8 weeks, and the regenerated tissue was histologically similar to the rabbit's normal skin. The mechanical properties and suture-holding ability of the scaffold met the requirements for a skin repair scaffold. This study demonstrated that sodium alginate hydrogel-based scaffolds are promising materials for skin repair, and this new generation of scaffolds could be a new strategy for skin repair. }
